

Akhtar, Nadeem, Wuhan University, China

Cross-Cultural Adaptation of African Students in Chinese Universities: An Analysis

China has turned into heaven for African students but being a closed world, in the last century, its culture and environment is fairly new due to which they are facing a lot of adjustment issues. This article will take the issue of adjustability of African Students in Chinese universities in the light of Young Yun Kim and William B. Gudykunst cross cultural theories. A survey will be carried out among the international students of United Africa in China. The author will see that what are the major obstructions in their adjustment and how they coup the cultural differences here. The issue will be analyzed through a regression line and in the light of empirical results suggestions will be directed to the concerned authorities of ministry of education and administration of Chinese universities to mitigate the hurdles of adjustment issue for prospective students to make China a real dreamland for international students.