

Gaonkar, Dilip, Northwestern University, United States

Whose Present? Which Critique?

It is no longer possible to articulate a critique of the present from a politically and culturally stable, let alone philosophically and ethically objective, stand point. Historical flux is deep and genuine. Multilaterality (actually an oligarchy of a group of nations) is the order of the day, even though hegemony persists and new dependency has emerged. Hence, the challenge: whose present? which critique?